Woman in the Nineteenth Century (Annotated) Margaret Fuller

Woman in the Nineteenth Century is a work by American journalist, editor, and women's rights advocate Margaret Fuller. Originally published in July 1843 in The Dial magazine as "The Great Lawsuit. Man versus Men. Woman versus Women", it was later expanded and republished in book form in 1845.

The basis for Fuller's essay is the notion that man will rightfully inherit the earth when he becomes an elevated being, understanding of divine love. There have been periods in time when the world was more awake to this love, but people are sleeping now; however, everyone has the power to become enlightened. Man cannot now find perfection because he is still burdened with selfish desires, but Fuller is optimistic and says that we are on the verge of a new awakening. She claims that in the past man, like Orpheus for Eurydice, has always called out for woman, but soon will come the time when women will call for men, when they will be equals and share a mortgage.

This edition has been formatted for your Kindle, with an active table of contents. This work has also been annotated, with additional information about the essay and also Margaret Fuller, including an overview, summary, composition, publication history, analysis, criticism, legacy, biographical and bibliographical information.
