Shanghaied?: The Economic and Political Implications fo the Flow of Information Technology and Investment Across the Taiwan Strait: TR-133 (Technical Report) Michael S. Chase, Kevin L. Pollpeter, James C. Mulvenon

The flows of trade and investment across the Taiwan Strait have increased dramatically in recent years, driven largely by the increasing integration of the information technology (IT) sectors of Taiwan and the People's Republic of China. This report examines the economic and political implications of cross-Strait flows of technology and capital. The authors comprehensively analyze the investment and IT transfer dynamics between Taiwan and China and their implications for the global semiconductor industry and U.S. policymaking.
