This textbook is the second part of my first Ebook about English expressions - how to say them in Chinese.

As we know, many expressions are universal and exist in many languages.

Every language uses its own metaphors and its own method to describe them.

English contains many commonly used expressions to express many ideas and contents.

The parallel Chinese expressions are generally (but not totally) not derived by literal translation word by word.

In this second part there are the more commonly used English expressions and the way they are expressed in Chinese. The English expressions are exhibited in alphabet order and are followed by pinyin in addition to the Chinese characters.
