Night Wind Paul H. Kogel

In an instant, my whole world came apart like every piece of finery slipping from the shelves of a china shop - all in a single instant. I don't know what I heard first or saw last; it all came at me at once, flooding my soul with cold, stark horror. There came a rush of nausea as the wind carried with it the putrid smell of rotted flesh. I heard thunder and lightning, wind and pounding rain...and a wolfish howl. I saw flashes of light, slashing rain, a bloody body, fiery eyes, long sharp teeth dripping with froth and a large towering beast standing in front of me with mouth agape and long, sharp claws raised threateningly high. All these images pushed against my heart and mind in soul-clenching pulses. And then...
